Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Christian Education in a Course of Lectures: Delivered in London, in Spring 1829 The following Lectures having been delivered ex tempore, and written out afterwards from a few notes, taken by a friend at the time, it will not be expected, that this volume should contain anything like an exact report of what was then said. The leading ideas, however, have been preserved, and no topic of importance has been omitted. The writer, though an alien by birth and by law, belongs more to this nation than any other, by his sentiments and his affections, which may serve as his apology for speaking of this country as if it were his own; and for censuring, without reserve, what he has found in it worthy of blame; a freedom which, had his feelings been those of a foreigner, he would have avoided, as unbecoming and invidious. In vindication of his principles, he has nothing to say; hoping that the Spirit of Truth will vindicate them in every candid mind; in which hope, if he should be deceived, he is willing that his views should stand condemned.
